What is “Hocho-shiki (Japanese knife ceremony)” ??

The ‘Hocho-shiki’ is a solemn ceremony from the Japanese dynastic period and is regarded as an expression of classical culture. The origin of the Shijo-ryu dates back to the early Heian period, when Emperor Koko became familiar with cooking and personally prepared the food. This ritual was used for court events and by court nobles and feudal lords to entertain their guests. Various fish and birds, including carp, were used as ingredients, each with its own specific way of cutting. The Shijo-ryu did not die out through the Warring States period, but was succeeded in the Edo period and developed under the Tokugawa shogunate. The tradition continued after the Meiji era and has continued until the present day. At present, the ‘Hocho-shiki’ is dedicated to shrines and temples all over the country and is preserved as a classic intangible folk culture of Japan.
